

DOWNTOWN EASTSIDE:

an artful exploration of why and how people sometimes do good things towards each other

We have all grown up with and inherited evidence that people, especially in groups, do harmful things to others, often those from other groups.

We may be less aware of times that groups of people have helped, protected and rescued others from harm. These stories are there if we look for them – hidden in history, tale and memory - showing that a social goodness is perhaps always difficult, rare and fragile, and yet possible.

Grounds for Goodness comes to the Downtown Eastside Heart of the City Festival from Toronto's Jumblied Theatre + Arts for a week of collective online story-sharing and art-making. (October 28-November 8, 2020).

You can take part by:

- Completing a story card (cut from this sheet and follow instructions on reverse side).
- Check out our online gallery and DTES displays,
- Tune in for online public workshops and events,
- Get in touch for more info:

STORY CARD INSTRUCTIONS:

Share a story of a time that a person or people helped, protected, sheltered or rescued others - everyday or epic, from memory, family, history, news, legend, imagination.

Once you've thought of your story, fill in your card:

What? Write a short version of your story.

Where? Where does it take place?

When? When did it happen?

Who? Who is it about?

Add:

- in the square box: a drawing or image related to your story,
- in the rectangle below this: a short title for your story,
- your name, contact info and consent at the bottom.

Contribute: your story card by:

- delivering it to a Downtown Eastside story card box.
- e-mailing a photo of your card (both sides).

For info and to contribute or e-mail photos, contact:
